About The 2015 Summit

The 2015 Summit will focus on the importance of community engagement in the pursuit of health equity. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) defines community engagement as “...the process of working collaboratively with groups of people who are affiliated by geographic proximity, special interests or similar situations with respect to issues affecting their well-being.” Research has always been clear about the value of health in building communities that are free of conditions that adversely impact individual and community well-being. The fact that the concept of health equity should not be bound by geography, social standing or race or ethnic background, underscores the need to continue to implement and evaluate effective programs and policies to ensure health equity in all communities. Community engagement to achieve health equity is an important strategy in identifying programs and resources which strengthen local community capacity to promote healthy living. This year’s summit is intended to inform participants of the importance of engaging the community in programs and services that achieve health equity.

Abstract Themes

All evidence-based research, best practices, best policies, and evaluation methodology that highlight how community engagement can contribute to the achievement of health equity are welcomed. Research topics should focus on but not be limited to:

- community engagement approaches for improving health and healthcare
- community strategies for reducing risk factors and eliminating disease
- mobilizing local communities for action
- promoting healthy living for individuals, families and communities across the life course
- educating communities on the concept of health equity through community engagement
